Reference

1. [REDACTED] We asked the Bureau to forward any information they might have concerning the instructions David GREENGLASS had received from Julius ROSENBERG.

2. The following is apparently the result of the Bureau's interrogation of GREENGLASS and represents all the information available to the Bureau in this matter.

"ROSENBERG advised David and Ruth GREENGLASS to leave everything in their apartment and to just take their clothing and go to Mexico City. In Mexico City they were to rent a house and after living there for one month they were to write to the Soviet Embassy in Mexico City, using a name which was furnished by ROSENBERG, but which David and Ruth GREENGLASS do not now recall. In this letter a mention was to be made of the United Nations. According to ROSENBERG's instructions, three days later David GREENGLASS was to meet someone in front of the statue of Christopher Columbus in a park in Mexico City, Mexico. David GREENGLASS was to be standing in front of the statue at 5:00 PM with his thumb in a Mexican City street guide. An individual would approach him who would state, 'Have you ever seen such a statue before?' GREENGLASS was to answer, 'No, I have lived in Oklahoma all my life.' The individual would then state 'There is a much better statue in Paris.' The individual would then give to David GREENGLASS passports and money for a trip to either Stockholm, Sweden, or to Berne, Switzerland.

In these cities the same procedure was to be followed and David Gale recalls that if he travelled to Stockholm, he was to stand in front of the statue of Linnaeus, at which time he was to receive additional papers through which to continue his trip to Goochenlotul.
Upon his arrival in Traga, Goochenlovania, he was to write to the Soviet Ambassador merely stating "I am here."
