3 4 - 5

NATIONAL INTELLIGENCE ESTIMATE

NUMBER 34-57

(Supersedes NIE 34-54)

Commence of the state of the st

Leonitted by tea DECOTOR OF CENTRAL DITELLICENCE

telligence organizations of limpated in the forestimets: The Centre Yesolligence Agency digeron organizations of the Departments of the third that, the Airy organization and The Joint Stat. The following atclinence organizations proportion of the estimates. The Continued the intelligence organizations of the continued the intelligence organizations. State, the army, the ?

cog in ty ins

INTILLIGENCE STABORY COMMITTLE

on 23 January 1947. Concurring acre the Special Assistant, intelligence, Department of State site Assistant Chief of Stag, Intelligence, Department of the January Me Director of Mazul Intelligence, the Department of Intelligence, United and the Leaving Director for Intelligence, The Joint and The Assistance of Control Department of the IAU, and the sacistant Director Todate! Department of the IAU, and the sacistant Director Todate! Department of the fortificial the Intelligence of the residualism.

THE OUTLOOK FOR IRAN

THE PROBLEM

To estimate probable trends in Iran's stability and orientation over the next law years.

CONCLUSIONS

- We believe that over the next few years the present regime in Iran can rely upon police controls and the support of the armed forces to maintain itself in power. However, its ability to govern effectively for a period beyond the next two years or so will depend greatly upon the extent to which current plans for economic dew lopn, and are carried out and the proges, me te in social and political reforms. brighld it not be able to show significant progress along these lines, the urban classes are likely to become increasingly restive. In such an event, the position of the nonarchy might be eadlangered. the ile than has wentified himself thely with the government in power.
- 2. So long as the Shah retains control. Iran will almost certainly seek to identify its interests with the US and the anti-Communist states of the Middle East. However, the continuation of such a course depends heavily on US support of Iran and the maintenance of US prestige in the Middle East.
- 3. The succession to the throne is not clearly established, and the death or incapacity of the Shah would probably open up a period of factional disturbances and a struggle for power. The outcome of such a situation would depend largely on whether the armed forces remained united and on what leader or leaders they supported.

DISCUSSION

4. The Shah of Iran, through his increasing direct intervention in government and with the support of many of the traditional power elements—senior army officers, landlerds, and wealthy merchants—has had a substantial measure of success in restoring the position and authority of his government since the overthrow of Mossadeq in 1953. The Tuch (Communist) Party and extreme nationalist epposition groups as exemplified by the followers of Dr. Mossadeq have been repressed and offer no immediate threat to internal security. Oil production and revenues are increasing steadily under the basic agreement reached with the Consortium in 1954. The

SORE

1

i-

15 15 16

:: :-

5.

÷.

;ą

of.

٩.

T.

5-

٦-

Έ.

ļy.

2-

D:

...

-5-

٠,,

:-

12

'n

:1: G

3-

1.

a.

)ľ.

1

0-

10

Since the spring of 1953 the Iranian security forces have disrupted the Tudeh organization atmeture to such an extent that its present expabilities for effective political and subversive activity are extremely low.

:-

tribal these are more quiet than they have also in actify years. The or percentiles are dissided in the linear dements to thewart the or manient in the Mords have been earlied by againg the etiens and by through the full works of the monarchy behind the government's program. The press has been under algorous conscrating, and open criticism of the government has been virtually silenced.

5. In this situation, the Shah has been able to pursue foreign policies consistent with his who have of Iran's national interests and gena sit purpled to those of the US and the or it. The Shah and his government thank Prime Whister Ala have been concerned primardy with defense against Soviet expansionist ambitions in Iran and the Middle East. with developing Itaa's economic strength, and with the south Trans presege in interna-Contract That District District have made to come a US support the party of disease and found in litery that a chemic aid from the US. Both publinly and privately they have endorsed Prosident Disenhower's proposals of 5 January 1957 concerning the Middle East. Despite the traif the leaning toward neutrality and antigraphy coding within the country, and desinte US unwillingness to provide prior additional oin and security commitments as a qued pro quo, Iran joined the Baghdad Pact in October 1955 and has since played an active role in its affairs. With the settlement of the oil dispute in 1954, and the reduction in Politish ability to induence affairs in Iran, the librations have welcomed the restoration of reislinships with the UK, particularly in the commercial field.

6. Iran has not become directly involved in Arab rivalries or in the nationalist, anticolorial inancuvers of the Afro-Asian Bloc. Design public sympathy for Paypt during the probabilities, the government has remained decol towards Nasser. Concern over the novement of oil has probabile played an important role in Iran's continued Fientification of its interests with the West on the Suczissus.

the second denty resold Sov. * Mon-signing to live or occres him into a neutral signification of the water as a class he has well as a live of the state of their war if each in mountains is about 321 mailled in great and white exchange, when of impunded trade, and settlement of the beancary computed.

3. Iran's essentially agrarian and underdeveroged economy has experienced a period of recovery since the resumption of oil premietion in 1954. Up until the present Trailinn fiscal years expenditures had been rising at a higher rate than the expanding government revenues. The resulting defloits sines August 1950 would have had an inflationary import on the concary had it not been for additional imports financed by US budgetary assistance amounting to about $250 million. Due to the recent allocation of part of the oil revemust to the ordinary budget and the probable increase in oil proposition, about $50 miltion of oil revenues is likely to be available for the ordinary budge in each of the next two Transon itsent years." This and the rising trend of other government revenues should permit the government to cope with its ordinary budget requirements without further US budgetary support. However, Iran is now seeking and will almost certainly continue to seek US budgetary support. Over the course of the Second Seven-Year Plan (1956-1963) oil revenues, which are estimated to reach an annual level equivalent to $237 million thy early 1979, will probably be adequate to cover the requirements of the Plan Organization. During the next two years, however, Iran will probably have to depend on loans from such sources as the Export-Import Bank and the IBRD if its ambitious development schedule is to be met.

9. Although a major share (60 percent in 1956 and 1957, and 75-30 percent in the next

The Ironian fiscal and calendar year begins on 21 March.

Oil revenues (including taxes and other stipulated payments) were 508 million in 1955, will probably total $100 million for 1956, and may reach $200 million in 1957.

^{*}Consortium payments to Iran are in sterling. Under a secret UK-francian convertibility agreement 40 percent of those sterling payments are convertible into dollars.

the portion of the standilly increasing oil revewats has been committed to the Seven-Wear can tem visible results have been obtained. Agreemment efforts so for have been princinally confined to planning and centracting activities and a large proportion of them projects in for projects beyond the capacity of a consistor than feelinient, and man-. . ent organishms. Despite the fact that the cherent plan is but a first and very inadequate applicalimation of what an Iranian development plan ought to contain, it does est for h priorities in communications, transa court we designed to and nowed that are preac libered in a decelopment of seeming it weren public deillucion with the Plan Organization, due to collays and on exaggerated expectation of what the oil revenues can accomplish, makes it politically mecessary that visible progress on projects of Lamediate impact value both in Tehran and the provincial cities to realized in the next low years. The government is depending for such progress on a number of foreign firms to whom it has contracted out many of the projects. Whether it will be successful will depend in large measure on the support that the Plan Organization gives these firms.

10. The Iranian military and security forces, numbering some 163,000 officers and men, are presently organized, equipped, and deployed primarily for internal security duties, and these forces are clearly strong enough to deal with any prospective internal opposition. The purges of 1634-1956 effectively reduced a Geograph Tuden infiltration among officers and them. We have that once the new tew years the armed five a will remain responsible their some throws the most of whom the local to the Shah, although there will continue to be signs at discatisfaction with the resime. Burny sleid grade and lower officers are sympathetic to the Mossaded type of nationalism, but they would be unlikely to initiate any movement against the require. The loyalty of the officer corps to the monarchy would be uncertain in the event of the death or incapacity of the Shah.

11. The Shah has accepted US recommandations for a reorganization and redeployment of his army which are designed to increase acmbat effectiveness and might provide some capability for conducting a limited delaying action along tran's northern frontier. However, improvement in the ability of the Iranian armed forces to make any useful contribution to local or regional defense will almost certainly be slow and difficult to realize beearns, of the generally low level of morale among the poorly paid conscripts, the lack of technical competence and military experience. and the prevalence of corruption. Moreover, the implementation of this program will probably be possible only on the basis of continuing US military advice and an increase in US aid over current levels.

12. Iran's present orientation depends heavily up in the Shah's personal leadership, continued US support, and the achievement of internal improvements sufficient to increase confidence in the regime and prevent a reversion to extreme nationalism. President Thenhower's proposals of 5 January 1957 will probably eace francen pressure for a US security commitment against an attack by the Seviet Union, but will not satisfy the Shah's desire for sucstantial US military eid. In lran's present posture of open alignment with the West, the Shah will thus expect continued US aid and support, including establishment of a modern armed force. If he should be substantially disappointed in this expectation, if the Baghdad Pact should collapse, or if US prestige should suffer serious blows in the Middle East, the Shah might feel compelied to adopt a neutral position and to make accommodations to the USSR and the internal

The army is currently organized into nine light infantry divisions, three light armored divisions, and five independent brigades. The air force has a total of 130 aircraft, including 6 T23 lets and 18 F47s. The navy consists of two patrol escorts, one submarine chaser, one yacht, 14 pairol vissely, and three small service craft.

article force imposers a longer person of 12 and a pendirmed or rural policy force of 21000, and a small air force (3,700 officers and men) and many (3,970 officers and men), as well as a frontier guard. The three cavines and occurs to the control country ander a Suprame Shaft. The cavines to the control of the Stationary of the control cavines received to a stationary of the Stationary

13. Internally the government has made little progress in coping with the fundamental causes of discontent that gave strength to the ultranctionalists and Communists in the Mossadeq era. Despite the increased directwass of his leadership, the Shah has not overcame actuaryy and corruption in the government i tachinery, and some of his own maneuvers have added to the debilitating atmosphere of intrigue and factionalism among responsible officials. The Shah's efforts to encourage land reform and to satisfy widecorned persent aspirations for land ownermer stachard opposition from the and country. I fittle progresseeing been made hall all any the eloadade pristances of the urban korkers.

14. Largely as a result of these factors, the ragime has been unsuccessful in developing a with buck of popular support and in fact para jest pround in this regard since and all of 1953. Popular hopes that the tenoration of the Shah's authority and the solution of the oil dispute would provide a solid basis for economic and social progress have given way to a general sense of trustration. The Ala government has become the object of word-of-mouth criticism by all classes of the Iranian public because of its suppression of civil liberties, its apparent indifference to popular grievances, and the preoccupation of its leading figures with matters or personal advantage. This criticism has come increasingly to involve the Shah, whose intervention in day-to-day government operations has deprived him of some of his prestige ... a national symbol above the political struggle. Mithough criticism of the regime is strongest among intellectuals and reform elements, who especially resent their lack of o, portunity to express their views openly, it must, among cirtually all elements of the publically conscious palific both in Tenran and in the provinces, including even mose closely associated with the regime. The Shah will be feed increasingly with such criticism and will have to take steps to satisfy it if he is to avoid an internal crisis dangerous to the monarchy.

15. The Shah is at the moment in firm control of the situation, and political activity largely revolves about the efforts of various interests and personalities to gain his favor. Despite the existence of widespread grumbling and cynicism about the government, there is little disposition by any opposition groups to challenge the status quo as long as the Shah can effectively command the loyalty of the armed forces. Nevertheless, unless greater progress in economic development, especially that benefiting the urban classes, and general modernization of the social and political structure is made in the next few years, the government's ability to maintain internal stabilito its likely to become increasingly dependent on units errupted maintenance of strong police controls. Because of the firmness of these controls and because of the Shah's assumption of responsibility for government policy. future opposition and reform movements are likely to include him as a target and to take on a more revolutionary east than in the past. The Tudeh Party - which continues to exist covertly - has the potential to exploit such conditions and will almost certainly attempt to join forces with other opposition elements.

16. The succession to the throne is not clearly established, and the death or incapacity of the Shah would probably open up a period of factional disturbances and a struggle for power. The outcome of such a situation would depend largely on whether the armed forces remained united and on what leader or leaders they supported.