(U//AIUO) McCone Remarks on DCI Offer (U//AIUO) A 22 February 1962 Memorandum For the Record outlines DCI John Alex McCone's address to members at the Capitol Hill Club. Among his noted remarks, McCone revealed that he "had first learned of the President's [Kennedy] desire that he become DCI from the President himself." The memo records that McCone told of a meeting where "it was agreed with the President that no commitments had been made on reorganizing the Agency or the intelligence community and none would be undertaken until after Mr. McCone had [] a chance to study the situation for himself." The DCI said that "he had made it clear to the President that he held strong views on certain subjects and that he had not changed these views, and that these opinions were contrary to those held by some of the President's closest advisors. The President told Mr. McCone that he was aware of his views and had gone into the whole matter quite thoroughly and wanted to make sure he would have the benefit of Mr. McCone's opinions along with the opinions of others."
• Mr. McCone was a founder of the Bechtel Corporation. In addition to a successful business career, he served President Eisenhower as Commissioner of Atomic Energy. President Kennedy decided to replace DCI Dulles after the failed Bay of Pigs episode, and brought McCone in as DCI in late 1961 an interesting appointment given that McCone was a lifelong Republican. Mr. McCone served as DCI until early 1965, when President Johnson named Admiral Raborn to replace him.
(U//AIUO) A short DI briefing paper on Iran, prepared for the National Security Council (NSC) in August 1957, reads in part: "The Shah is determined to rule supremecompletely unaware of the growing dissatisfaction and political frustrations which could threaten the very existence of his regime. Bitter criticism of the Shah's rule has come from members of the Iranian ruling class, members of the cabinet, Majlis deputies, high-ranking army and police officers, religious leaders, and politically powerful landowners. While this discontent has been growing, there is apparently no group or combination of groups strong enough to challenge the Shah's power and force him to 'reign not rule.' The Shah is able to play one potential leader against the others. They do not trust each other enough to form an effective coalition."
• After this briefing, it took more than two decades for the rest of the story to unfold. By May 1978, the Shah was facing bloody riots in the streets. And, the Ayatollah Khomeini headed the most powerful faction within an effective coalition of opposing forces. In January 1979, the Shah fled Iran. Prime Minister Bakhtiar approved the return of Khomeini, and the story continues
(U//AHUO) New Remote-Controlled Fighter Plane (U//AHUO) (DO report - USSR - circa 1954) "According to statements by a Soviet official, it appears that the USSR has developed a new short-range defense combat plane for crewless operation. Because of its short length, stated to be seven meters, it is easy to transport. To the question whether a starting ramp was required, and the plane therefore tied to bases, the officer answered that it would take off from a launched carriage. It has a tail assembly like the MiG-15 and delta wings. It is powered by a rocket engine, and in addition has a ram jet pipe astern."

(U//ANUO). The CIA Executive Director's diary contains an intriguing (15 September 1965) entry: "there was a free-for-all fight in the cafeteria today, as a result of which three or four additional employees were dismissed." The use of the term "additional," without further explanation, is particularly interesting.
