Didi,

Thanks for the note. What I sent were the pages that dealt with those paragraphs Michael was concerned about when we were in his office, so that he'd see how each of the issues he raised was resolved, and to make sure each one of those fixes addressed his concern. (I nearly send just the paragraphs, not the whole pages, since we're concerned about not having additional copies floating around. I'm not worried about Michael, but as you guys would say, it's bad tradecraft.)

Let me check in with my editor at Random and discuss it. I'm out of Washington now, but back later in the week, and maybe the answer is for me to come over with the pages again, as I did last time, and then bring them back with me. You said he was travelling; do you know when he returns?

cheers,
David
