HIGHLIGHTS

Food shipments to North Vietnam from China and the USSR continue to rise, reaching a total of over 370,000 tons so far this year (cf. 55,000 tons last year). Sharp clashes between Allied and Communist forces were reported in scattered areas of South Vietnam.

I. The Military Situation in South Vietnam:
Heavy fighting was reported near Dak To in the central highlands and in several other widely scattered areas on 6-7 November (Paras. 1-4). The South Koreans reported killing 113 enemy soldiers (Paras. 5-6). An update of the 5 November fighting near Song Be discloses that the South Vietnamese lost nearly 100 killed (Paras. 7-9). Additional fighting was reported at Loc Ninh and in an area south of Da Nang (Paras. 10-12).

II. Political Developments in South Vietnam:
The Communists persist in terror tactics against the Chinese community and have sent threatening letters to Chinese newsmen in Cholon (Para 1). A Liberation Front official claims that the Front will not transfer itself into a formal government as long as the war continues (Paras. 2-3).

III. Military Developments in North Vietnam:
Unusually heavy MIG activity was reported over North Vietnam on 6 and 7 November, [redacted]

~~TOP SECRET~~I. THE MILITARY SITUATION IN SOUTH VIETNAM

1. Heavy fighting was reported near Dak To in the central highlands and in several other widely scattered areas on 6-7 November.

2. A battalion of the US 173rd Airborne Brigade, operating with the US 4th Infantry Division in Kontum Province, killed 18 North Vietnamese soldiers in clashes southwest of Dak To. US losses were 16 killed and 29 wounded.

3. The major fighting began in midafternoon when a US company patrolling in the vicinity of a recent B-52 strike came under heavy small-arms fire from an enemy force in well-fortified positions. The positions were overrun after another US company, air strikes, and artillery were called in. During the night the two companies' defensive perimeter was hit by a ground probe and several mortar rounds.

4. Two other companies of the US 173rd reported brief but violent clashes in the same general area, ten to 12 miles southwest of Dak To. US 4th Infantry Division troops have also fought North Vietnamese regulars in this area recently.

5. In Khanh Hoa Province along the central coast South Korean troops reported killing 113 enemy soldiers in another cordon operation around two villages near Ninh Hoa, capital of the district of the same name. Twenty-two ROK troops have been killed so far.

6. The enemy troops, an estimated two companies of the North Vietnamese 18B Regiment, were believed to have been on a rice collection mission when they were trapped by the South Koreans. The cordon-and-search operation is a favorite tactic of the South Koreans who have made it increasingly difficult for the enemy to operate in the heavily populated coastal districts of Khanh Hoa Province. Nonetheless, the enemy has persistently attempted to maintain a presence in this region, taking high casualties in the process.

7. South Vietnamese suffered badly in the fighting on 5 November three miles south of Song Be. Ninety-six South Vietnamese were killed and 33 wounded. Three US advisers were wounded, and 25 ARVN soldiers are listed as missing. The enemy's losses are reported as 23 killed.

8. Reporting on the engagement is sketchy. It appears, however, that the South Vietnamese 31st Ranger Battalion ran into trouble while en route to reinforce another South Vietnamese unit which had engaged an enemy battalion.

9. Both the North Vietnamese 88th and the Viet Cong 275th regiments are believed to be in the area. The 88th, formerly a subordinate of the North Vietnamese 1st Division in the central highlands, moved down to Phuoc Long Province late in the summer. It opened the current enemy offensive in III Corps with a heavy ground assault against an outpost near Song Be on 27 October. The 275th, a regiment of the Viet Cong 5th Light Infantry Division in southeastern III Corps, has been noted moving cross-country to the Phuoc Long area since early October.

10. Meanwhile, 25 miles west of Song Be at Loc Ninh, 18 US infantrymen were wounded in a brief enemy mortar barrage. The fire was returned but enemy casualties were not determined.

11. In other action, US Marines in Operation ESSEX, some 25 miles southwest of Da Nang, ran into stiff resistance on 6 November from an enemy force in a village fortified with bunkers, trenches, spider holes, and barbed-wire barriers. Two Marine companies attacked with air and artillery support, forcing the enemy to fall back from one defense line to another, taking their dead and wounded with them. Six Americans were killed and 45 wounded in 12 hours of sporadic fighting.

II. POLITICAL DEVELOPMENTS IN SOUTH VIETNAM

1. The Communists are continuing terror tactics against the Chinese community in the Saigon-Cholon area. [redacted] warning letters from the "Saigon - Gia Dinh Special Operations Unit" were delivered on 30 October to all Chinese newspapers in Cholon, Chinese newsmen at Saigon radio and the Voice of Asia, and the Chinese Correspondents' Club in Cholon. The letters to the newspapers criticized them for having encouraged voting in the recent elections and warned that they must immediately stop publishing news favorable to the government. The newspaper editors, as a result, are reportedly avoiding appearing in the streets, and at least one paper has stationed a 24-hour police guard at its offices.

2. Foreign Ministry officials in Paris have offered a few comments on the National Liberation Front. The Front's representative in Hanoi told the French delegate general there in September that the Front would not transform itself into a formal government as long as the war continued. He emphasized the importance of the Front's new political program, however, and stressed in particular the alleged differences between the Front and the North Vietnamese Government. He cited the program's call for a coalition government in the South and its encouragement of "bourgeois" economic elements in making his point. Other Front spokesmen have taken a similar line recently.

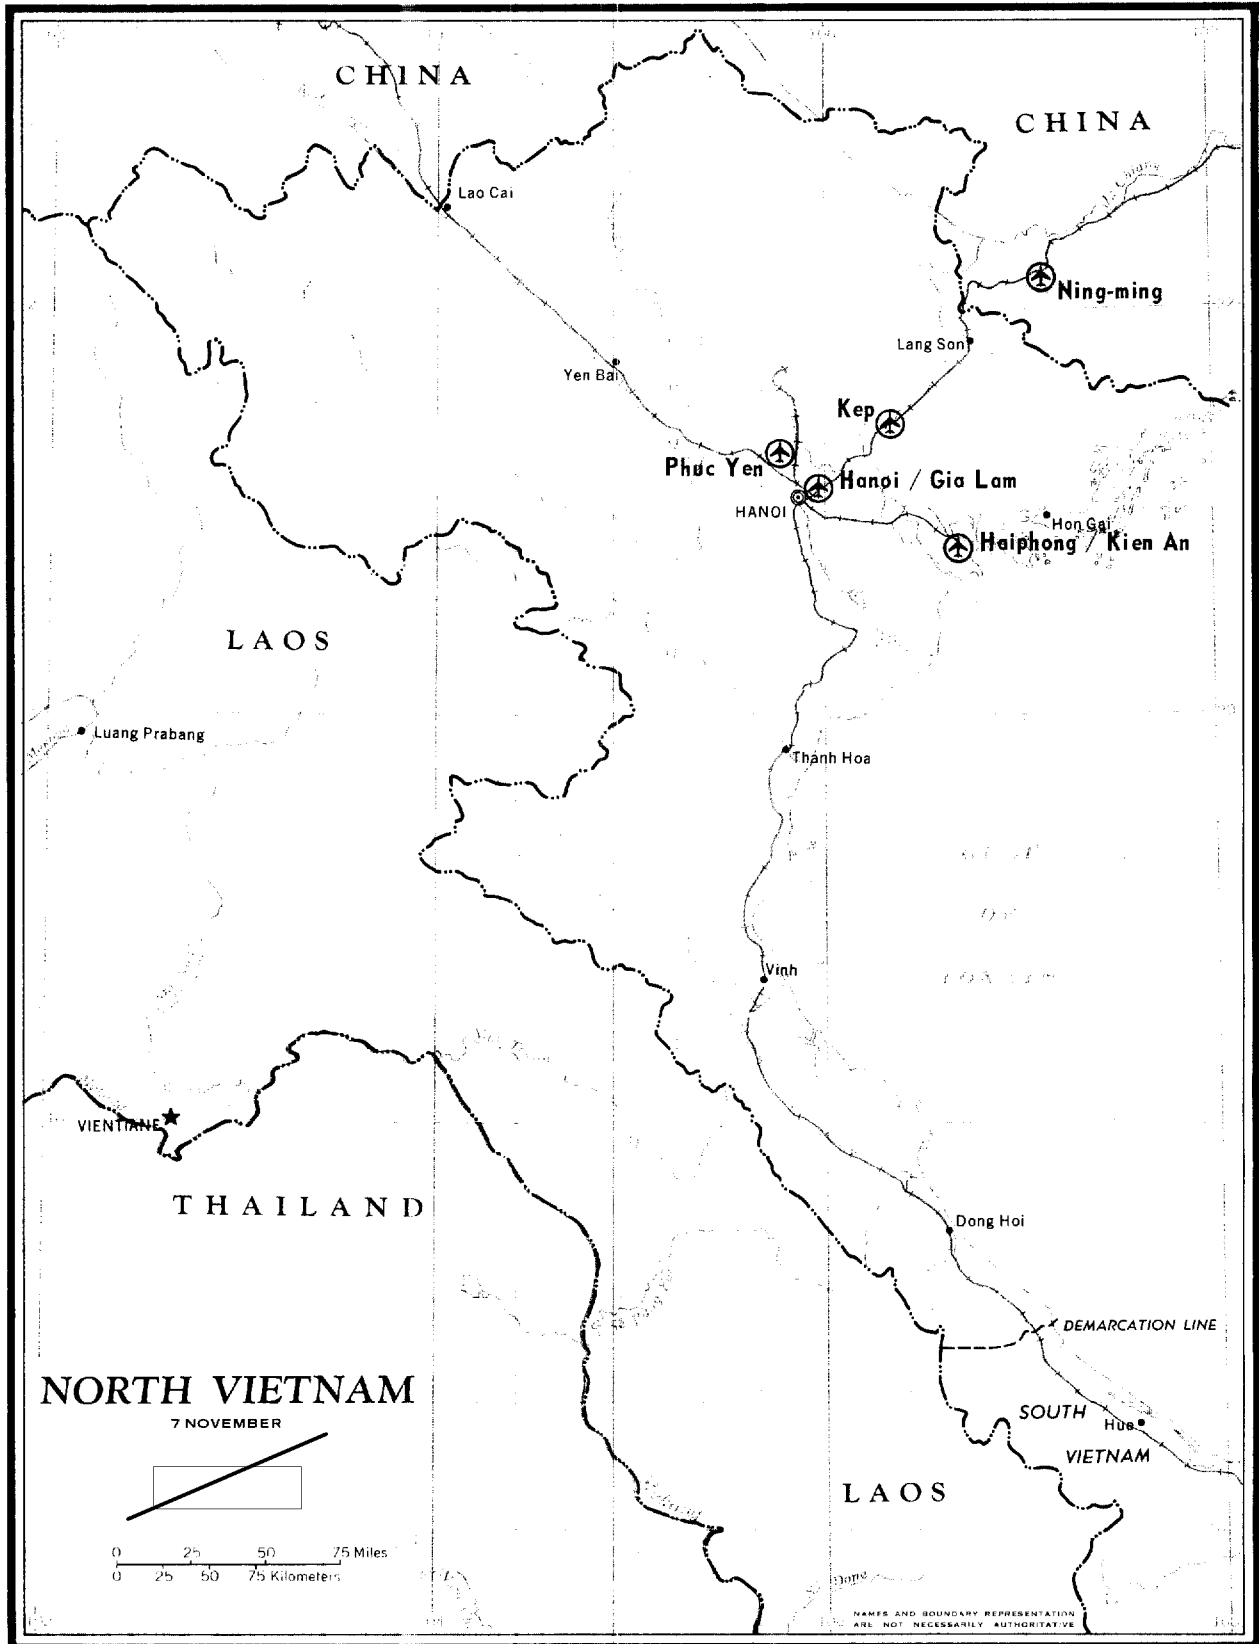

3. The French also believe the Front has adopted a harsher line toward a negotiated settlement of the war. They say that, in both public and private statements recently, Front spokesmen have been talking less about negotiations or the relevance of the Geneva agreements than they had earlier this year. We have reported this trend before; it is in keeping with Hanoi's very rigid approach toward negotiations in recent months.

III. MILITARY DEVELOPMENTS IN NORTH VIETNAM

1. Unusually heavy MIG activity during the past two days once again raises questions about the size and mission of the North Vietnamese fighter force. Pilot reports of MIG sightings and encounters on 6 November indicated a greater number of Communist interceptors active in the defense of the Hanoi/Haiphong area than had shown up in [Redacted]

3.3(h)(2)

[Redacted] Since no new aircraft have been detected flying into North Vietnam, it is assumed that Hanoi either is using MIGs kept in concealed storage areas or has received a new shipment of fighters from China or the Soviet Union.

[Redacted]

3.3(h)(2)

3. The air activity of the past two days has demonstrated again the resilience of Hanoi's air defense. Despite heavy MIG losses North Vietnam can continue to launch enough aircraft to pose a significant threat to US air operations. [Redacted]

3.3(h)(2)

3.3(h)(2)

The aggressive performance of North Vietnamese MIGs on 6-7 November suggests that at a minimum Hanoi will attempt to have enough fighters operating from bases in the Red River Valley to force US strike aircraft to be accompanied by heavy fighter cover.

V. COMMUNIST POLITICAL DEVELOPMENTS

1. The Communists continue to portray the current military activity around Loc Ninh as a retaliation for recent US bombings of the Hanoi area and to herald it as the beginning of the winter-spring campaign. An article in the 2 November issue of the Hanoi army daily, Quan Doi Nhan Dan, stated that the "victories of the Southern peoples' armed forces" were a foretaste of greater successes to come in the winter-spring campaign. The paper asserted, "it is obvious that if the US aggressors attack the North one time, the Southern armed forces and people will counter-attack five or ten times--no matter how many difficulties and hardships we have to overcome and even if we have to make sacrifices and engage in protracted fighting." The article praised the skillful fighting methods used in the Loc Ninh "victories," especially the use and close coordination of infantry and artillery units.

2. Further Hanoi commentary on the same theme is found in the party daily, Nhan Dan, and in regular Hanoi broadcasts. Nhan Dan on 3 November referred to the Loc Ninh battles as the "bugle call" of the winter-spring assault and a Hanoi broadcast of 6 November claimed that the "punishing blows" dealt by the Communists at Loc Ninh were in response to the political program of the NFLSV and in retaliation against "the savage US raids on Hanoi."

3. Nhan Dan has published a lengthy and wide-ranging article in praise of the Bolshevik Revolution and its lessons for today's struggle against the US. The article was written by party First Secretary Le Duan, who is now in Moscow as head of Hanoi's delegation to the 50th anniversary celebrations. It is broader and more pointed than the pro forma items by Ho Chi Minh and Defense Minister Giap published recently in the Soviet press. The latter were confined largely to praise for Soviet accomplishments. Le Duan's fuller treatment seems intended as the major North Vietnamese pronouncement on this occasion and is aimed mainly at interpreting current Communist problems in the light of the 50 years' experience.

7 November 1967

TOP SECRET

4. Le Duan comes down hard on the need for Communist unity in pursuing the struggle in Vietnam. His language is more specific on this point than that of any recent Vietnamese Communist spokesman. Today's "urgent problem," he says, is "to consolidate and strengthen the unity of the socialist camp," and the "unity of the international Communist movement" in order to continue the "common struggle for socialist revolution." Le Duan calls for the "establishment of a world united front" against the United States similar to that used by the USSR in the 1930s against Nazi Germany. He asserts that setting up such a front is one of the "most basic problems" facing the Communist movement.

5. While his call for Communist unity doubtless will please Soviet leaders, Le Duan also reaffirms North Vietnam's insistence on revolutionary violence as an indispensable ingredient of national liberation movements. He emphasizes the responsibilities of all Communist countries to support such movements wherever they exist, but makes it clear that the Vietnam struggle is the main task at present. The "world revolution," he reminds his audience, will surely enter a new phase "provided the socialist camp and other revolutionary forces in the world prove resolute" in promoting the "offensive spirit of the October revolution and follow the revolutionary line of Marxism-Leninism."

6. Reflecting Hanoi's deep-rooted nationalist sentiments, Le Duan also asserted that, while working for unity, each Communist party must "firmly preserve its independence, and fully accomplish its duties as a revolutionary vanguard."

7. North Vietnamese dependence on other Communist countries for material support to continue the war has made cooperation within the "socialist camp" an issue of paramount concern to the Vietnamese Communists. The ramifications of the Sino-Soviet conflict continually complicate the situation for Hanoi, and it has been forced to tread a razor's edge between Moscow and Peking. While maintaining an essentially neutral stance in the Sino-Soviet conflict, the North Vietnamese seem to be using the Soviet anniversary as an occasion again to remind both Moscow and Peking that their differences must not be allowed to undermine the Communist effort in Vietnam.
